Three Accusations

CPCs are not licensed medical facilities.

CPCs do not have medically licensed staff.

CPCs provide inaccurate medical information.

CPCs: Reframe the Narrative

---

Women's Health Centers are charitable nonprofit organizations that offer evidence-based medical and educational services under the direction and supervision of a licensed physician who is serving as the Medical Director of the center. Medical services are provided by licensed medical professionals who are practicing within their scope of practice. These medical centers have a proven track record of being an important safety net for pregnant women in Georgia.

Fallacy: CPCs are not licensed medical facilities.

We are a women's health care clinic practicing medicine under the direction and supervision of a licensed physician and staffed with licensed medical professionals. We are a medical clinic that is defined under the Washington state medical structures as ambulatory health care facilities. Washington state does not license such medical clinics. Rather, they license and hold accountable the medical professionals who are practicing within their scope of practice in the facility.

Fallacy: CPCs do not have medically license staff.

We are staffed with medical professionals who are practicing medicine under the direction and supervision of a licensed physician and within their scope of practice. Furthermore, we are accredited with the Accreditation Association of Ambulatory Health Care (AAAHC) or we adhere the standards set by the AMA, AIUM, and AWOHNN.

Fallacy: CPCs provide inaccurate medical information.

We are staffed with medical professionals who provide evidence-based medical education under the direction and supervision of the center's Medical Director who is a licensed physician. We use the Women's Right To Know publication that is produced by the Georgia Department of Public Health to educate on fetal development, abortion procedures and risks and available pregnancy options.
